Pwc fair value measurement guide book

Since I am addicted books have the power to ignite a passion for learning, provide us with a sweet escape and connect us to who we are and who we want to be, while also inviting us to get out of ourselves. Ah, the magic of storytelling. And while we can all have a lot to learn from literary greats and trailblazing fiction, there is something particularly remarkable about children's books. Think about it: What other genres cleverly pack complex messages into beautiful illustrations and moody rhymes? It's a real art form. Therefore, we decided to round up our favorite contemporary children's books that adults will love to read just as much as children. We've also made sure to include the best children's books that convey powerful messages of kindness, curiosity, integrity, diversity, family, and more so you can promote and strengthen your values. Our list organizes the message you want to promote, so scroll and start curating your own library. We hope these books will facilitate difficult conversations and inspire your little ones to get by in life with more inspiration, wisdom and lizards. @freddieharrel Jillian Tamaki They Say Blue, Hardcover $18 $14 Shop The Message: Jillian Tamaki is a lyrical and philosophical story of how perspective shapes everything. It encourages discovery through experience and wondering about the unknown with a sense of pleasure and openness instead of striving for simple, easy answers when the unique core of truth never really exists. Opening line: They say the sea is blue. It certainly looks from here. But when I hold water in my hands, it's as clean as glass. Oliver Jeffers Here We Are, Hardcover $20 $12 Shop The Message: Oliver Jeffers is known for his brilliantly colorful, fun and affordable children's books, and We Are Here is no exception. Whether you're reading it as an educational book to learn more about the planet or to instantly instill a sense of wonder and gratitude, it will inspire you and your little one to love, respect and care for the environment. Opening line: Well, hello. Welcome to this planet. We call it land. Ashley Spires Thing Lou Couldn't Do, Paperback $18 Shop Message: You can grow out of failure and fall (translation: make mistakes or get injured), doesn't necessarily mean failure, as long as you turn it into a learning moment. Opening line: Lou and her friends run faster than the plane. They're building powerful fortresses. They're rescuing wild animals. Lous is brave enough for everyone! That's until her friends decide to climb a tree. Simona Ciraolo Hug Me, Hardcover $18 $12 Shop The Message: In addition to learning all about the personality and makeup of succulents, this book also enters into a variety of family dynamics and attachment styles. This book also communicates that there is someone for everyone, no matter how alone they feel at certain moments. Also, keep an eye out for the prize even if other people it's not worth your time. Opening line: Felipe came from an old and famous family who liked to look good and always behaved properly... They didn't notice that all Felipe wanted was a hug. Junot Diaz Islandborn, Hardcover $18$13 Shop Message: You'll learn about ways we can find strength in our communities and how we can discover things about ourselves by connecting with our past (even parts we can't remember for ourselves). Written by Junot Diaz, it's a powerful story of identity, memory and home, wherever that may be. This book can also be read as a history lesson on the Trujillo dictatorship in the Dominican Republic. Opening sentence: Every child in Lola's school was somewhere else. Hers was a school of faraway places. Michael Rosen with Michael Rosen's Sad Book of Quentin Blake, Hardcover $19 $14 Shop The Message: If you've struggled to help your child understand grief, whether it feels it or someone he loves, let this book be your tool. It's definitely not a happy book, but it effectively communicates the idea that it's okay to feel sad. It also toes with loss, sadness and depression. As an adult, you can also find comfort in Rosen's evocative language. Standout Line: Sometimes I'm sad and I don't know why. It's just a cloud that comes along and covers me up. Andrea Beaty with David Roberts Ada Twist, scientist, Hardcover $19 $9 Shop The Message: We don't often see young girls of color in children's books on science and math, so Ada Twist, Scientist is a breath of fresh, empowering air. It encourages girls to pursue their interests, to remain hungry for knowledge and, most importantly, to believe in their potential and strength to work through challenging puzzles. It was also written in a fun, upbeat tone. Opening line: Ada Marie! Ada Marie! Said a word until she was three. She bounced around in her crib and looked everywhere, watching the world, but not making a sound. Samantha Berger with Dan Santato Crankenstein, Hardcover $18 $11 Shop The Message: This book uses humor to get your little guy out of a bad mood and help them take a little annoyance of everyday life less seriously. For a child (or parent) who could use laughter and learn how to light things up, you'll want to add this children's book to your shelf. Opening line: Have you seen Crankenstein? Oh, you'd totally know if it was. Oliver Jeffers with Sam Winston A Child of Books, Hardcover $18 $14 Shop The Message: If you love to read and want your child to discover the power of storytelling too, this will be your new favorite book. In this metafictional children's book about a little girl living in a book, we learn about all the ways in which reading learning can expand one's own worlds. Opening line: I come from a world of stories. And on my imagination, I'm floating. I sailed across a sea of words to see if you'd retire with me. R.J. Palacio We're All Wonders, Paperback $10 Shop The Lesson: Palacio brings us a children's version of his best-selling young wonder novel, which is also the book that inspired the Choose Kind movement. This book is about a child who wants to belong and shows us how we can all relate, even if we don't look the same. He learns empathy, compassion and acceptance of all for who they are in. Standout Line: I know I'm not just a kid. Of course I do ordinary things. I ride a bike. I'm eating ice cream. I'm playing ball. I just don't look ordinary. Matthew Olshan with Sophie Blackall The Mighty Lalouche, Hardcover $18 Shop The Message: This gloriously whimsical take on the David and Goliath story arc will be the current favourite for both parents and children. It tells the story of a mild Frenchman who beats the odds and shows us that everyone has a story to tell and the strength to offer. In addition, you may learn some basic French. Opening line: A hundred and a few years ago, in Paris, France, there lived a humble postman named Lalouche. He was small. Lalouche, and pretty bony. But his hands were agile, his legs were fast and his arms were strong. Wolf Erlbruch Duck, Death and Tulip, Paperback $12 Shop The Message: This book can help you have difficult conversations about death and mortality if you're not sure where to start. Instead of pushing the agenda on what happens after death, this book talks about accepting mortality to make you feel more alive and appreciate the moment. Turning the terrifying figure of looming death into something much more natural. It's even worth reading on your own. Opening line: For some time now, the duck had a feeling. Who are you? What are you doing, sneaking up behind me? Nan Forler with Marion Arbona Trampoline Boy, Hardcover $18$12 Shop Message: Daydreaming a boy with heads literally in the clouds is teased for jumping alone on a trampoline all day instead of playing with his peers. Until one day he meets a like-minded man who accepts him for who he is. This story teaches us to embrace our own interests and explore who we are, not to adapt to the status quo. Opening line: Trampoline boy loved bounce. Twirly-swirly, loop-de-loop. He went up into the blue, blue sky. Elin Kelsey You Are Stardust, Paperback $12 Shop The Message: This poetic science lesson about the origin of our planet is a fun read, but it also helps parents and teachers articulate complicated ideas. Metaphors are also a great way to encourage your child to embrace their miraculous individuality. Standout line: You're a star star. Every atom in your body came from a star that exploded long before you were born. Ed Young

The Cat From Hunger Mountain, Hardcover $18 $13 Shop The Message: This modern take on a old fable is about learning the lessons of insatiable greed the hard way. The cat only appreciates what it had (and how these material things never mattered) after it disappeared. Oh, and Mixed media visuals are more than stunning. Opening sentence: On the mountain of famine lived a rich master who found everything conceivable, and yet he never had enough. C. G. Esperanza Red Yellow Blue (and Dash of White Too), Hardcover $11 Shop Message: A fun, cheerful read about the endless capacity of creativity and imagination, this is a fun book for aspiring artists. It's cute, simple and beautifully illustrated, so opt for this children's book when you want to keep the light and fun before bed. Opening sentence: Splish, splash, sploosh! I painted the elephant blue. Maribeth Boelts with Noah Z. Jones Those Shoes, Paperback $8$7 Shop Message: This book explores socioeconomics and the pressure to fit in. Ultimately, we learn that material possessions are not what make us feel cool, and more importantly, that feeling of cool is not as important as being kind and connecting with our loved ones. Opening line: I dream about those shoes. Black high-tops. Two white stripes.
